

S33.2

Health literacy a strong weapon to improve health status

Skander Essafi

IFMSA, Public Health, University of Sousse, Tunisia

Corresponding author: Mr Skander Essafi, IFMSA, Public Health, Sousse, Tunisia. E-mail: lph@ifmsa.org

Evidence shows that there is a relationship between low literacy and a range of health related outcomes well established. As a consequence, there are some indirect effects related to employment and lifetime income, and some direct effects of low literacy, individuals are therefore less responsive to health education, less likely to use disease prevention services, and less likely to successfully manage chronic disease in the long term.